Every book that we take up without a purpose is an opportunity lost of taking up a book with a purpose; every bit of stray information that we cram into our heads without any sense of its importance, is for the most part a bit of the most useful information driven out of our heads and choked off from our minds. — FREDERIC HARRISON.

PREFACE.

THIS work is an arrangement into an alphabetical subject list of works of fiction which are founded on fact, historical, physical, psychological, or moral. Foreign fiction, having a common alphabet, is included, as well as English, with the addition to the lists of the English translations whenever they exist. No attempt has been made to give the different translations by their translators, as for the purposes of a subject index one translation is as good as another. It has not been the object of the author to include in this topical arrangement all works of fiction, but only novels with a purpose, those which are sent out into the world with a definite lesson to teach mankind. The author reserves the right, even in this narrow limit, to discard many purpose novels where the facts forming the foundation of the stories have been so misrepresented or misstated as to be an injury rather than a help to the reader. Such an index must necessarily include very largely the writers of our own century. The older works of fiction, with a few notable exceptions, deal with intense love affairs, and have no other object than the whiling away of an idle hour. During our own century the novel has come to have a very different sphere. It is no longer sufficient that the work of fiction be an avenue through which the reader may follow the working of an overwrought imagination. Better still, it has ceased to be a boast among educated and intellectual people that they are not novel readers. On the contrary, it is now an established fact that no one can claim to be well educated in the highest sense of the term who is unfamiliar with the best fiction of other literatures.

With an increasing use of fiction has come a demand for subject classification in fiction. Booksellers, librarians, and the reading public generally have felt the need of some arrangement of fiction lists other than by author and historical epochs. It is in the hope of in some degree meeting this demand that the author offers this contribution to bibliography. Most of the novel reading of to-day is disconnected and purposeless. It is believed by scholars of literature who have seen this Index that it will make it possible to use with a purpose even the leisure reading of the books we "take up for an hour" and will permit the accumulation of much useful and instructive information in the form of a sugar-coated pill.

The author has endeavored to give the Index the greatest possible simplicity and directness, in the hope that in such a form it may be able to go into every private home as a family reference librarian, giving to its inmates a wise and satisfactory answer to the much repeated question, "What can I read?" The work does not claim to be an exhaustive treatment of the subjects considered, but does give to its readers a comprehensive list sufficient for all working purposes, and far better for the average student than a larger and therefore less carefully selected list. The basis for the selection has not been the personal choice of the author, but is the result of practical experience among students using the lists. In every case the request was made of those to whom the references were given that they mark those found most useful to them in the lines marked out. The compilation of such selections carried on for over six years is the Index now offered, not for the use alone of my students and readers, but for all brain workers everywhere.

The author wishes in this connection to acknowledge publicly the assistance rendered to her in this work by the libraries of the British Museum, La Biblioteca Nacional at the City of Mexico, the Congressional Library, Boston Public, Columbia College, and the libraries of Chicago, both in their publications and the courtesy of personal attention.

It is earnestly hoped that inquirers after truth in all departments will find in this volume a great labor-saving device, as well as a wise counsellor and friend.

This is an age of specialization. Life has become so complex that one may no longer aim to know everything, if success is to be attained. "This one thing I do," must be written over the study door. By the help of this Index the student may, even in the hours of leisure and recreation, still follow out the lines of research upon which specialization is based.
